Abstract from Thesis

“Fractional controller techniques for unstable and integrating plants with time”

Stable type models are easier to manage in the process sector than unstable and integrated type models. Given these processes, the control also has to be quick to reject disturbances and resistant to measurement noises. This thesis presents new control strategies for unstable and integrating delay processes. The benefits are demonstrated by improved load disturbance rejections and handling of noisy outputs. The analytical method is developed with a fractional internal-model-control (IMC) filter and a new feedback controller design. Extensions to the hybrid structure with the IMC and Smith predictor are made for unstable and series cascade-integrating systems. Furthermore, a fractional filter has been adopted to establish a relationship with a fractional-order tilt integral derivative (FOTID) controller. Parameter tuning is suggested with explicit formulae for ease of calculation. The required fractional-order tuning parameter also follows the conditions of the desired gain and phase margins. In addition, the dual measured cost function is developed to tune the time constant of the new fractional filter. For the purpose of demonstrating the benefits of the new control procedures, a thorough numerical study is given. Numerous numerical investigations have generally indicated that modern approaches offer improved setpoint tracking and smoother control signal changes.

Abstract from Thesis

“Transforming Higher Education in the South Pacific through E-Learning Technologies and Digital Literacy”

Technology has become an indispensable part of the 21st century in which concepts such as technology-enabled society, technology-enabled living, technology-enabled workforce and technology-enabled learning have emerged. The adoption, implementation and widespread use of these new technologies raise the need to refine new skills and competencies to perform tasks and solve problems in the technology-enabled society, these skills are known as the digital literacy skills. This research work involved evaluation of student readiness to technology-driven education in the South Pacific and design and development of the very first digital literacy framework, digital literacy scale and digital literacy intervention program for the South Pacific and beyond. This thesis aims to investigate student readiness for eLearning in the South Pacific and then propose a new digital literacy tool that can be used to improve student learning at Higher Education Institutes in the South Pacific. The results show that digital literacy scale was an effective measure of digital literacy skills and the DLIP was an effective intervention that can be used to improve the digital literacy skills of individuals. Overall, the thesis makes a global contribution to the literature on digital literacy in the South Pacific. Additionally, the thesis introduces a newly developed digital literacy framework and tool that can be used to measure and improve digital literacy skills for individuals in the South Pacific and beyond.

“Vatu-Dei Indigenous-Fijian Psychological Resilience of iTaukei Children and Families in Koro”

Natural hazards are on the increase due to climate change with the impact on communities of interest to researchers. A wide range of published research investigated the psychological effects of disasters on children and their families, while exploring stress related factors, coping, and resilience. However, research findings on ‘psychological effects of disasters’ are representative of Western views and the psychological resilience of iTaukei (Indigenous-Fijian) children, and their families has yet to be explored in the academic literature. This research highlighted iTaukei children’s voices post-disaster in relation to Tropical Cyclone Winston. It explored Indigenous-Fijians’ cultural-psychological responses to disaster, their coping strategies, and the resilience of children and their families in three villages in the Lomaiviti archipelago, that were severely battered by Tropical Cyclone Winston in 2016. An epistemological approach employed culturally appropriate qualitative research designs utilizing the Fijian Vanua Research Framework (FVRF) and Talanoa methodology. Resilience in iTaukei communities is a process which historically existed with our ancestors and forefathers, but was negatively impacted by colonization, leading to cultural loss. Indigenous knowledge and values based on the Vanua (Land and people), Lotu (Spirituality), and Vuvale (Family) were identified by participants in this research as beneficial during the crisis they experienced. The Vatu-Dei Indigenous-Fijian Psychological Resilience Framework then emerged from the findings of this research, encapsulating cultural identity and iTaukei values as its foundation. Similarities in coping strategies for children and parents are indicative of the transmission of indigenous knowledge from parents to children. The iTaukei (Indigenous-Fijian) coping strategies and resilience following a natural hazard event provides a pioneering body of iTaukei knowledge contributing to global literature on psychological and psycho-social resilience in disasters. The Vatu-Dei Indigenous-Fijian Psychological Resilience Framework not only has local relevance for iTaukei communities but can also be utilized in the greater Oceanic region.

Ceceilia Carol LOUIS (Vanuatu)

The first three panels represent, in order from top, FIJI ISLANDS, TONGA, and SAMOA. In each case the central motif was adopted from a traditional tapa of each country. While the motifs appear to be stylised flower or star patterns, the symbolic significance of these ancient designs has long since been lost. This is also true of the more geometric elements of the border patterns. Other inspirations are more obvious: the Fijian comb pattern features at the top and the bottom of the entire tapa; frigate birds are between the panels for Fiji and Tonga; and cannibal forks feature between the Tonga and Samoa panels.

The fourth panel represents SOLOMON ISLANDS and has as its main motif a lengga nut design from a kap-kap shell ornament, which is traditionally worn around the neck. The striated triangles at the edges were taken from a carved war club.

The central motif for the fifth panel, representing KIRIBATI, is taken from a fine woven mat. This is bordered on each side by a stylised shark's tooth spear and is separated from the panel above by a design taken from the finely woven sinnet cord featured on the haft of the spear.

Between the fifth panel and the sixth panels representing TUVALU, is a turtle border design taken from a Fijian tapa. The Tuvalu star pattern is also taken from a mat design and the border represents the ancient bamboo flute which is still sometimes played in Tonga.

The seventh panel represents COOK ISLANDS. In the centre is a motif from a carved ritual adze from Mangaia while the bottom border is taken from a wooden food bowl.

The VANUATU panel beneath features a design from a rare ritual head-dress of the Banks Islands and is bordered by a pattern which is said to represent the marks made by crabs walking across wet sand.

The ninth panel is for NIUE. Its central motif, the bent cross pattern on the sides, and the flying birds which separate this panel from the one above are all taken from a very old tapa returned to Niue from New Zealand. The centre design is common throughout the entire Oceania/Indonesia region.

The panel for TOKELAU is taken from a woven mat, and is separated from that for Niue by a stylised crab design.

The eleventh panel represents NAURU and shows string figures, which are a traditional art form. The central figure tells a legend of twin babies fighting for milk at their mother's breast, while the side figures depict flying fish.

The final panel is for MARSHALL ISLANDS. The top and side borders come from a traditional Marshall Islands mat weave, referring to lineage and land inheritance. The side borders are joor, meaning pillar, and refer to the important positions of chiefs and lineage heads. The central motif is a navigation stick chart, rebbelib or meddo, used by the ancient sailing masters to chart currents and islands.

CEREMONIAL DRESS

The ceremonial dress of the University of the South Pacific was designed in light weight materials to be appropriate for tropical conditions. The principal colours reflect the brown of tapa or masi found throughout the Pacific, while the blue derives from the colour of the sea and the sky.

OFFICER'S ROBE

Chancellor: The gown is made from brown Indian silk with long sleeves lined with cream silk. The facings are six-inch (fifteen-centimetre) wide strips of specially designed tapa motifs representative of all the member countries of the University Region. The material is gathered at the yoke. The headgear is a trencher covered with brown Indian silk, with matching braid round the lower edge, and a brown tassel.

Pro-Chancellor: The gown is as for the Chancellor, but with the unlined sleeves. The headgear is as for the Chancellor without the braid.

Vice-Chancellor: The gown is as for the Pro-Chancellor, but the facings are four-inch (ten centimetres) wide strips of tapa. The headgear is as for the Pro-Chancellor.

ACADEMIC DRESS

Doctor of the University: The gown is in dark blue Indian silk with pleats on each side at the back. The sleeves have a horizontal lower edge and a slit in the front. Facings down the front of the gown are in light blue Indian silk, as are the linings of the sleeves. The hood is a simple cowl twice the size of the bachelor's hood with a lining in light blue. The headgear is a trencher in dark blue Indian silk with a light blue tassel.

Master of the University: A dark brown master's gown, with a light blue lining for the hood and front V attaching it. The headgear is a dark brown trencher.

Doctor of Philosophy: The gown is as for the Doctor of the University but the sleeves are unlined and the facings are in red. The hood is as for the Doctor of the University hood but the lining is red. The headgear is a trencher in dark blue Indian silk with a red tassel.

Master's Degree: Gowns should be of cotton in the dark brown colour of the usual deep shade of tapa cloth patterns, in a simple design with three pleats on each side at the back. The sleeves come down to knee level. The hood is a simple cowl lined with the following degree colours: forest green for Agriculture, gold for Arts, purple for Business Administration, teal for Commerce, cream for Education, aqua blue for Engineering, silver grey for Law, brick red for Medicine, palm green for Science; and pale pink for Master in Computing and Information Systems (MCIS) and Master of Information Systems (MIS). The front finished in a two-inch (five-centimetre) wide V which is in the degree colour. The headgear, which is optional, is a trencher in a light-weight matching brown fabric.

Master of Philosophy: A dark brown gown and plain dark brown hood.

Postgraduate Diplomas and Certificates: A dark brown gown only, the same colour and design as the master's degree.

Professional Diplomas and Certificates: A dark brown gown only, the same colour and design as the master's degree.

Bachelor's Degree: Gowns are of the same design as for the master's degree, but in a lighter shade of tapa brown. The hood is lined in the discipline colours as defined by the master's dress. In addition, orange is assigned for the Bachelor of Software Engineering (BSE) & Bachelor of Network and Security, and magenta for the Bachelor of Geospatial Science. The front V attaching the hood is in plain brown. The headgear, a trencher, is in the same light tapa brown of the gown.

Combined programmes: Where two programmes are completed simultaneously resulting in the award of 2 certificates, the recipient shall wear two hoods (each depicting the colour of the two qualifications) as part of their academic dress.

Diplomas and Certificates: A light tapa brown gown only, the same colour and design as the bachelor's degree.

GARLAND OF ACHIEVEMENT

Lyrics: Tuala Tiresa Malietoa II
Original arrangement: Ueta Solomona
Rearrangement: Igelese Ete, 2003

The University of the South Pacific
The net spread out has fish
Birds have grown wings
The song of triumph is heard
The song of triumph is heard

Chorus

Sons and daughters of the Pacific
Arise and acclaim
The garland of achievement
Sweet fragrance of fame
The garland of achievement
Sweet fragrance of fame

Our canoe is now sailing
The islands our home
Await in expectation
Our welcome and return
Our welcome and return

In the midst of diverse colours
Traditions and cultures
From this bubbling spring
Shall Pacific soil be nourished
Shall Pacific soil be nourished

Shaping
Pacific
Futures
